Hundreds vaccinated at employee flu clinic

Denver Health kicked off the first in a series of employee flu clinics on Monday, with more than 620 people receiving a free vaccination. All Denver Health employees, contractors, volunteers, residents and students are required to get an influenza vaccination or have an approved exemption by Nov. 1. All employees must register online, including those vaccinated offsite, those who request exemptions and those who work from home. Four more flu clinics are planned through Oct. 12.

Forbes recognizes Denver Health as a top employer in Colorado

We've been announced by Forbes as one of America's Best-in-State Employers of 2022! This recognition was created through a survey of 70,000 U.S. employees across 25 industry sectors. The survey considered every aspect of an employee's experience such as working conditions, salary, diversity and potential for growth. We are so proud to achieve the distinction as a top employer in Colorado and in the nation!

YOUR VOICE MATTERS

2022 Employee Engagement Survey to launch in late September

Today we are continuing a special series of stories in advance of Denver Health's 2022 Employee Engagement Survey. The survey, which runs Sept. 28-Oct. 12, is your opportunity to let leaders know what's working well and what needs improvement. Your voice matters, and your feedback can lead to real change. In advance of the survey, this series in the 411 is highlighting Denver Health's progress and achievements since the 2020 survey. This week's story looks at efforts to address issues raised about Payroll, the Human Resources Department and Operations.

Legislative committee visits family health center

The Statewide Health Care Review Committee visited the Lowry Family Health Center on Sept. 8 to learn about the immigrant and refugee clinic as part of their annual offsite meeting. The committee studies health care issues that affect Colorado residents. Dr. Dan White and Betsy Ruckard from the Lowry clinic provided an excellent presentation about the work the immigrant and refugee clinic does and the importance that the clinic has to our community and patients.

New infant security system coming to Pavilion C

A new electronic security system for all infants and some children in Pavilion C will be rolling out starting Tuesday, Sept. 20. The technology will increase safety by providing alarm systems and lockdown features when patients move close to or through exit doors. The system also will have pairing technology on the labor and delivery, and mom and baby units. We'll share more with you about the program in the near future.

Denver Health thanks the Environmental Services Department

It is International Housekeeping and Environmental Services Week, and we would like to thank Environmental Services Department employees for their tireless work that goes mostly unnoticed. Thank you, all, for your great work to help our patients.
