Improve your sleep, improve your health

Denver Health’s home-sleep program helps patients determine if they have sleep apnea. I don’t think people know how many aspects of life a good sleep quality can affect, said Casey Feller, a respiratory therapist with a specialty in sleep education. Our work is to connect what we’re hearing from patients with the rigorous research that demonstrates vaccines are safe, said Josh Williams, MD, FAAP. Being able to state where you come from and what drives your concerns really matters, so a huge part of our job is to listen.

Denver Health patient celebrates a milestone in her cancer treatment

Amy Locke recently became the first Denver Health patient to ring the Oncology Department’s newly installed bell, signifying the end of her cancer treatment. They treated me like family, Locke said of the Oncology team at Denver Health.
