Surgery with strings attached

Conner Carver was awake during brain surgery, playing his mandolin while Denver Health neurosurgeons removed a lesion that had been causing epileptic seizures for nearly a decade. Operating on an area of the brain that affects memory and speech, surgeons sought to ensure that the 29-year-old could continue to play music and recall the right notes.

Run for the history books

While most of Denver slept, Brandon Ensign was running. And running. And running. He ran 70 miles to honor the history of Rocky Mountain Poison and Drug Safety, which started in a phone closet at Denver Health in 1956.
